With a delightful score that includes the famous "Tea for Two" and "I Want to Be Happy," the lighthearted No, No, Nanette was once called "The Happiest Show in Town." No, No, Nanette started the nostalgia craze on Broadway. It is a show that takes the audience by the hand and leads it back to the never-never-land of the 20s. Things were dearer, sweeter and sillier then, and so is No, No, Nanette now. This is the story of Jimmy Smith, and all the trouble he gets into and out of, on a summer weekend in New York and Atlantic City. Jimmy has become a millionaire, due to his Bible publishing business. His wife, Sue, remains frugal and has little desire for money; her main concern is raising their adopted daughter, Nanette, into a respectable lady. No, No, Nanette was first presented in London and played for 665 performances at the Palace Theatre. It then ran for 321 performances on Broadway at the Globe Theatre. The New York revival played for 861 performances at the Forty-Sixth Street Theatre in 1971.

"There are many facets to putting together a high school musical, but perhaps, the two most important are growth and sharing. The playwright shares ideas and feelings through his script with the directors and actors; the directors and actors share with each other; the actors share with the audience. Through this process, the play grows from words and musical notes on paper to a living, dynamic being. Not unlike Jimmy Smith, the goal of TKA's amazing student cast has been, in part, to 'spread sunshine.' If we can share something of ourselves with you, the cycle is complete." - Melissa Podczaszy and Jim Sluyter, Directors
